

...CONTINUED

PURE AND SIMPLE Atelier de Troupe's bold style is apparent in its Cubist chair ($950), Cigale chandelier ($7,250), OS tables (from $850) and Normade table lamp ($925).

SAN DIEGO

To Market

Earlier this year San Diego's naval training center-turned-retail and restaurant complex, Liberty Station, rolled out a hip makeover. In addition to new eateries and the city's first food hall, the sprawling indoor-outdoor venue has welcomed

Moniker General, a highly curated boutique that blends a modern yet laid-back coastal approach. The selection includes leather goods, design books, surfboards and accessories from premium brands like SALT. Optics and Shinola, as well as Moniker's own line of industrial-style wood and metal furniture. Thirsty shoppers can indulge at the shop's coffee bar or in local craft beer from 32 North Brewing Co. We'll drink to that! 2860 Sims Road, San Diego, monikergroup.com

—Archana Ram

LOS ANGELES

Sharp Contrast

What do the American Trade Hotel in Panama, Barchetta restaurant in NYC, Hotel du Ministere in Paris and the Ace Hotel Downtown Los Angeles have in common, besides their undeniable good looks? They've all been outfitted with decor by L.A.-based lighting and furniture design studio Atelier de Troupe. Founded four years ago by husband-and-wife team Gabriel Abraham and Ji Shin, the brand, known for bold, sculptural pieces in an edited black, white and metallic palette, has recently opened a studio and by-appointment showroom in downtown L.A. "It's sort of a mini-compound with a workshop in the back where we make prototypes and customize things for our clients," says Shin.

Looking ahead, the duo is conceiving a collection with a surrealist spin. "We're thinking a David Lynch type of surrealism," says Shin. "But how do you translate that into a lamp?" We can't wait to find out. 4100 W. Jefferson Blvd., L.A., 323.870.5303, atelierdetroupe.com —LEJ

CLEAN LINES A rendering of Moniker General showcases a selection of their wood and metal furniture pieces.

SAN FRANCISCO

Making Scents

This spring, Jo Malone London will open its first standalone NorCal boutique, on Union Street in San Francisco's Cow Hollow neighborhood. Coinciding with the opening of the 1,750-square-foot shop—designed in the brand's signature black and cream motif with Georgian-inspired lacquered cabinets—is the launch of the Rare Teas Collection. A nod to an ancient tradition, Silver Needle Tea is a modern olfactory interpretation of a beverage historically reserved for imperial families. The line's romantic perfume (5.9 fl. oz. for $340) is a delicate floral blend enriched with rose, sage and bergamot. In June, the brand will launch a limited-edition collection of scented-drawer liners ($55), a candle ($70), a soap set ($40) and bath oil ($105)—all meant to evoke an English garden on a summer afternoon—in collaboration with British artist and wallpaper designer Marthe Armitage. 2157 Union St., San Francisco, 415.673.1091, jomalone.com —Allison McCarthy

BRITISH INVASION A look at Jo Malone London's first-ever standalone boutique in Northern California

ATELIER DE TROUPE PHOTO BY ESTUDIO PERSONA